

LPN nomination

Sara Ross

St. Albert

Sara has worked in the frontline since 2011, from the ER and Diagnostic Imaging, to public health. She has first-hand experience with the stressors facing the healthcare system.

Nursing morale is low and staffing shortages, from nursing to family doctors, impact both frontline nurses and patient care. Giving nurses from all designations a voice and a sense of community is key for retention, solidarity, and validation.

Helping engage and educate the public on the roles of each nursing designation will improve public confidence and the impact each role shares in our healthcare system.

"I am so excited about this organization. It's a huge step in reminding all nurses we are valued no matter designation, site of work, or years served nursing--we are all equal! This organization gives nurses a current voice at the highest levels of government and education."
